

How to write an article review:

- Whether you are writing a review of one or more articles, you should state at the outset what they are by title and author and maybe even publication.
- Your review should state what the overall context is for the article.
- What is its broad topic?
- Does this article contribute to understanding that? If so, how?
- What is new?
- If more than one article, state what they have in common and how they either complement each other or contrast with each other.
- Stay concise, do not summarize the article point by point unless somehow it needs that approach (like a legal argument). Show you understood what the author is conveying.
- Include your personal response or how reading the article(s) affected you.

Stay within two pages.